FOOTBALL BANQUET.

The banquet on Wednesday evening tendered to Coach Brewer and the team by C. P. Downey proved a splendid event. Mr. Downey himself was absent, but every word of his in writing showed his appreciation of the efforts of the host to do honor to the coach and the well-deserved players. The banquet was served in nine courses, and ample justice was done by the more than twenty guests.

W. K. Prudden, who, in the absence of a host, read a good story, argued for a splendid address, and one which set every member of the party to thinking and thinking hard, in introducing the toastmaster of the evening, Prof. Vedder, he mentioned his long connection with the institution and the interest he had always taken in the athletic department of M. A. C., both by the citizens and the press of Lansing.

Mr. John Weston responded to the toast "Elements of an Accomplished Football Fan," and men­tioned the loyalty always displayed by M. A. C., whether in defeat or in victory. The support of the team was earnest, and the new rules, stating that he be­lieved that sports like those upheld by the institution and the interest he had always taken in the athletic department of M. A. C., both by the citizens and the press of Lansing.

Prof. Vedder spoke of the splendid work of the players, and remembered the long connection which the institution had with the institution and the interest he had always taken in the athletic department of M. A. C., both by the citizens and the press of Lansing.

ANIMALS STUDIED AT UNIVERSITY FOR LIGHT ON HUMAN MIND.

Rats, cats, and ants are made to run through mazes or labyrinths at the University of Michigan in order to teach students their learning processes, and soon monkeys are to be added. The work is unique in that the experimentation accompanies a regular undergraduate course, whereas in the past such work has been reserved for graduate students engaged in some restricted problem, as is still the case with probably all other colleges throughout the country.

In general, the individual animal chosen to act as subject is placed in the entrance of a maze from which it cannot escape, and is allowed to wander about until it ultimately reaches the other end, where some food is placed. The labyrinth used for rats and cats is a wooden box, fifteen feet square, cut up by wooden partitions so as to make a continuous rectangular path with numerous blind alleys leading from it, and covered with wire netting. For some simpler maze of tiny paths covered by glass is employed. The observer takes a position above the labyrinth and carefully notes the animals every turn—when it enters a right path, when it hesitates between the two as if choosing between them. From the data thus collected, psychologists are able to discover the methods of learning used by each subject. Among the significant points which Dr. J. F. Sheperd, who has the work in charge, tentatively concludes, is the fact that the animals all learn the labyrinths backward, as shown by the wrong paths which it is possible for them to enter, those nearest the outlet are first to be consistently avoided by the animals, and the avoidance of the first error which it is possible for them to make in going through is the last step in their mastery of the maze.

For comparative purposes, similar data have been collected for human beings by having them follow paths of their own making and to try as to form a maze similar to the one employed for animals. The main difference, however, lies in the fact that of the animal's learning and that of man, is that the latter drop errors both from beginning and end. However, the man, too, learning one maze, seems to have caught the idea of "gaining through," and drop errors from both ends in learning a second labyrinth. At present the cats, which learned mazes last longer and have not entered during the summer, are being tested for their memory. Their performances in the last few days are said to be very creditable if compared with the average school boy's knowledge of mathematics, learned the preceding semester—University News Letter.

About 120 young women partook of Thanksgiving dinner at the Women's Building. A four course dinner was played, and coffee which coffee was served in the parlors. The short course bulletin has been received from the press and will be sent to every name and address in president's office.

Mr. and Mrs. Newman entertained at six o'clock dinner last evening in honor of the 50th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Wilcox, it also being the ninth birthday of Master Harold Newman.

Mr. Joseph Wing, of Ohio, a prominent writer for the Breeder's Gazette, was a college visitor one day last the week. Mr. Wing as a member of the tariff commission is making investigations relative to the cost of wool production.

The informal party held in the Agricultural Building Thursday was a pleasant affair. Students and faculty alike have made the best of the situation which prevented them from leaving the college at this time and the spirit with which all entered into the festivities was good to see. Light refreshments were served.

The first and only complete map of the city and college has just been completed by Mr. Newman of the drawing department. It is drawn to a scale of 132 feet to the inch. The location of all residences are shown, as well as that of all the important buildings on the campus. The limits are Mayor Goddard's line and T. C. L. McCord's west line. It is interesting to note that the city has grown in past nineteen years from a community of eight houses to a city of 203 residences, this exclusive of campus improvements.

Professor Joseph Baker Davis, who has been a member of the Faculty of the Engineering Department of the University of Michigan since 1872, resigned at the October meeting of the Regents. In recognition of his services to the University, the Board of Regents, upon accepting his resignation, made him professor emeritus. Professor Davis graduated from the University of Michigan in 1869, and after following his profession for several years, entered the faculty of the University. He was later made professor of geology and surveying, and for a number of years as assistant dean in the latter capacity he probably was one of the best loved men on the campus, and has always been regarded as particularly the student's friend.
