Misses Winnie Sipley, Daisy Dodge, and Ruth Shank were the guests of Miss Lucy Clute on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday of last week.

The Hesperian Society has recently remodeled its rooms in the west ward of Wells, and next Wednesday evening will give an entertainment to its friends.

The following card has been received from Ann Arbor:

Born to
MR. AND MRS. N. D. CORBIN,
a daughter
JOSEPHINE HORATIA,
June 14, 1893.

A gentleman and his wife, just from Chicago, spent a night at the College last week, and said, that the College grounds were the most beautiful thing that they had seen in their entire trip of sight seeing.

The Agricultural Department has received through Prof. Harwood from the Crystal Creamery Co. a creamer No. 3, a cream ripener, churn and butter worker. The apparatus is now in the Agricultural laboratory and has at present a great deal of attention, as the latest and best.

The Italian Bees belonging to the College have been taken to Lapeer, some of them however were too late for the train, and evidently being disappointed in not having a ride on the cars, are very angry and hover around the depot at Trowbridge, waiting for their companions, and ready to vent their venom on man or beast.

In the bulletin on "Michigan Birds," we note that the fish duck, common on Saginaw Bay, is not fit for table use and that the hooded merganser, or top-knot, common on Pine Lake, is reported by a Lansing authority as follows: "feeds on snails and crabs, excellent table duck." A Wisconsin man says of the same duck, "flesh almost as rank as the preceding" and a Californian, "this duck is not noticed by the hunters as it has no market value."

APPRECIATION.

The Detroit Journal a few days ago contained the following article, which is so refreshing and well-merited an appreciation of the work of the College, that we print it for the benefit of those who do not see the Journal.

During the recent troubles in the Michigan agricultural college, the Evening News, true to its instinctive hatred of public educational facilities, did all it could to throw discredit upon that institution of learning.

The ignorant prejudice of the News led it to the assumption that the college was a failure because the number of students has not grown rapidly. That is too silly to call for refutation. Judged by that rule, how many famous colleges would be pronounced failures! More students are desirable, undoubtedly, but the agricultural college is a great success even with its present roll call.

The influence of that college is not exerted solely on the young men who enter as students. It reaches all the farmers of the state who are capable of receiving and using new ideas. By means of farmers' institutes, published lectures, and articles in the agricultural and horticultural papers, the professors of the agricultural college have done a great work to the end of placing farming on a higher plan. They have by investigation and experiments in laboratory and field, added to the farmer's knowledge regarding destructive insects, the rotation of crops, the use of fertilizers, the use of seed, the feeding of cattle, and many other lines of activity in agriculture. They are, patiently building up a science of horticulture for the development of new fruit and vegetables and the improvement of those we already have. They are studying chemistry and botany and all the sciences as they enter into agricultural problems. The work of investigation and discovery is of equal value with that of actual instruction given to the students.

Practical men acquainted with the agricultural college approve of it. There is an excellent instance which Detroiterers will appreciate. Hiram Walker, all will admit, is a practical, hard-headed, business man. No one will accuse him of using sentiment in the slightest degree in conducting any one of the score or more of enterprises with which he is connected. Some of his trees become infested with injurious insects; he sends to the agricultural college for an expert to examine them and suggest a remedy. His thousands of acres of farming land around Wakerville needed better cultivation to make them profitable; he wrote last year to the agricultural college to have a scientific farmer recommended, and the college sent one of its graduates, whom Mr. Walker engaged for a long term of years to take charge of his agricultural interests.

COMING—SO'S THE MILLENIUM.

Over four hundred feet of track has been laid on the Michigan avenue extension of the street railway and Supt. Davids states that by Saturday night the rails will be laid to the driving park. The grading will be completed tomorrow.
night, and the whole extension will be in running order by July 1.—State Republican. Why can't Supt. Davids hustle a little more, and get the road to the College by Commencement.

Among the Mechanical Engineers at Cornell University who received the degree, M. E., on June 15th, we take pleasure in noting the name of Wm. H. VanDervoort.

Dr. Kedzie has received a letter from D. R. Stewart, of Broxburn, Scotland, inquiring about the test in Michigan for the inspection of kerosene. Mr. Stewart is a member of the Broxburn Oil Co., Limited, and seeks to raise the test for inspection on account of the number of lives lost and property burned up by reason of lamp explosions in Great Britain—300 lives lost annually in England and Wales from this cause. The flash test is only 73° F. No wonder!

Adam Bede, as presented last Friday, by Miss Benfey, was greatly enjoyed by all who did not mind the thick swarm of mosquitoes, which vied with the reader to attract the attention of the audience. All unite in according Miss Benfey great credit for her remarkable self-possession and entertainment under such trying circumstances. She is a delightful reader, and we should be glad if we could hear her soon again. The Feronians deserve the thanks of the community for giving us the treat.
