(2) East Campus Intramural Building

At its November 12, 1984 meeting, the Board of Trustees authorized four projects: All-Events Arena, Indoor Football Practice Facility, Indoor Tennis Facility, and Renovations to Jenison Field House. The Board also directed the administration to involve appropriate groups in the planning process for these facilities. During this process, students and other faculty and staff representatives recommended that rather than to alter Jenison Field House for recreational purposes, it would better serve the needs of the students to construct a small recreational facility on the East Campus. It also reported at the April 4, 1985 meeting that the administration was considering this alternative; however, no formal recommendation was submitted.

President DiBiaggio stated that since he reported on items at the recent Board meeting at the Kellogg Biological Station, he has no report to make today except to state that he has received several letters since that time from faculty members and student leadership representatives at the Kellogg Biological Station expressing their gratitude and appreciation to the Board for having come to the Station and taking time to learn more about its activities. President DiBiaggio said he felt it was a very worthwhile experience and gave us a better sense of this University and the unique way it goes about fulfilling its teaching, research, and service obligations. He stated that he did not think there could be a better model and that it is, indeed, a national and international model of a land-grant activity and, also, that we are very proud of it and rightfully so.

President DiBiaggio also commented on recent news articles and, especially, the one which appeared in the University's newsletter on The First 100 Days. He felt there were some embarrassing comments which were inaccurate in that no one succeeds in any responsibility without the support of a great number of people. He told the Board that he thought it had provided him with a superb administrative team which worked well together in mutual efforts to serve this University. He stated that he appreciated the support and confidence the Board has expressed in the administrative leadership. He commented that if the success of marriages can be predicted on honeymoons, the quality of the one that he has experienced since his arrival would seem to indicate a long and very happy marriage, and he thanked the Board for its support.
